chrysler owners tell their stories

World of Wheels

After four years traveling around the world on our bicycles, we were faced with lots of decisions. We had a 1991 sedan that had seen its best days. Because we'd been rescued several times while bicycling, we wanted a car large enough to pick up stranded cyclists. We searched all possibilities and narrowed it down to the Chrysler Pacifica. It's low-profile, yet roomy enough for six passengers—and bicycles.

Now, what to do about a second car? We searched again, this time intent on finding legroom and headroom for Pat's 6'3" frame. Of course, with rising gas prices we wanted economy too. We found it all in the PT Cruiser. It was "Love at First Sit."

Perhaps the most interesting thing about both searches is that Pat spent hours on the Internet looking at cars from San Diego to San Luis Obispo, and both searches led us back to Harbor Chrysler in Ventura. They had the right cars, the right colors and the best price.

If anyone is interested in learning more about what life in the World on Bicycles is like, please visit us at WorldRiders2.com.

PERFECT PAIRING Bicycles may be their preferred form of transportation, but Cat and Pat Patterson love their Chrysler PT Cruiser and Pacifica too.

Setting Good Examples

I have owned many Chrysler products over the years. For about six years now I've owned a 1927 Chrysler Model "50." This model is a good example of the "Nickel Era" cars. The radiator shell, bumpers and other parts are all nickel-plated instead of chromed.

It is also a good example of quality engineering from the Chrysler Corporation in the 1920s. This vehicle has had a frame-off restoration, but the original upholstery was put back in and displays the quality of Chrysler in lasting so long. The simplicity of this vehicle makes it easy to maintain and a pleasure to drive. It always gets lots of attention, with thumbs-up and waves as it travels down the road.

LOOKIN' GOOD This 1927 Chrysler Model "50" showcases quality Chrysler craftsmanship that stands the test of time.
